WESLEYAN YOUNG ALUMNI WANT IT TO BE CO-ORDINATE EDUCATION.

Petition That Women Be Put in a College of Their Own or That in Seven Years Co-education Be Abolished-The Boys Afraid It Will Become a Girls' College. MIDDLETOWN, Conn., March 6 .- The committee appointed last year by the Wesleyan Young Alumni Association of New York to investigate the question of co-education at Wesleyan presented its report to the young alumni at their last meeting, which was the most largely at-tended of any ever held, and it was adopted unanimously. This report has just been put into the hands of the undergraduates at Wesleyan for their consideration. The General Committee, consisting of members of the Board of Trustees, alumni, and faculty, appointed at the last commencement, has the matter under consideration and will present its report to the trustees during the present month. It is believed that such radical action on the part of the trustees as the exclusion of women from Wesleyan is entirely improbable and unless some such scheme as that recommended by the young alumni is adopted that nothing will he done in the matter. The committee first inquired as carefully as possible for the opinion of the body of young lumni in this matter. The men of the last ten classes were urged especially to contribute their views, because it has been during the last decade that the rapid increase in the number of women students at Wesleyan has taken place, and the men of recent years, it was held, are, therefore, perhaps best able to judge of aitered conditions and tendencies of which they have had personal experience. About five hundred requests for expression of view were sent out to these men, and 332 replies were received. The poll of opinion resulted: Two hundred and seventy-five answered that they are definitely opposed to the present system; forty-one are entirely favorable to the system as it now exists; five are indifferent, and eleven undecided. Approximately, 83 per cent. voted in epposition to the present system.

Letters and many verbal expressions from still older alumni, viewing with general disfavor the present situation at Wesleyan, were received. Occasionally there appears a strong dissenting view, based on the ground that the theory and practice of co-education are rational. and must be insisted upon at Wesleyan in order to achieve there the highest results in education and in life. The committee also came upon a feeling which cannot be measured statistically. but which is thoroughly palpable, that, to use the phrase of the alumni, the present conditions are "breaking Wesleyan's grip on her male Wesleyan's cause is in danger of being prejudiced in the secondary schools; many young men in the East seem disinclined to matriculate at those colleges widely known as "tending in their constituency toward feminine majorities."

On the whole, there is within the field covered by their inquiries a widely spread opinion. amounting to a pronounced majority opinion. in opposition to the permanent continuance of the present system at Wesleyan. In the year of 1888-89 the proportion of women in college was 7 per cent., while in the college year of 1808-90 the proportion was 23 per cent., and it is the conviction of the committee that unless measures are taken to check it, "this increase of women over men is likely to continue until the radical development results in a transformation into a woman's college."

The report continues: "The increase in male students is and must remain limited by the keenest competition. We must share the students of our own section with Yale, Williams, Amherst, Dartmouth, Harvard and Brown. Where Wesleyan has reached out into other sections of the country she has always drawn the greater part of her student body from the Methodist Episcopal Church, and within that denomination alone the deplorable condition exists of nearly three score other colleges and universities of widely varying degrees of efficiency, it is true, but all with an influence, competing for the limited body of Methodist boys. With respect to men we are limited in field and by vigorous competition; with respect to women, there is a growing field in New England and practically no competition. Add to this the restive opposition of many undergraduates and alumni because of the situation, and the final outcome to us seems not uncertain nor far removed. "The increase in male students is and must

"Furthermore, this opposition which has grown up among Wesleyan men has its basis grown up among Wesleyan men has its basis in a conservative, and correct social philosophy for the older Eastern colleges. It does not ground itself in antagonism to co-education. For economic as well as social reasons the committee contends against the duplication of libraries and laboratories, museums and faculty in order to bring about an unnecessary separation of the sexes in education." The committee's position is exactly that of President Faunce of Brown in his recent inaugural:

The position of Wesleyan is peculiar. Complete co-education, perhaps never will be. Our college started differently. In New England, to introduce women into what has been for a century or for half a century, as in the case of Weslevan a men's college, with no change in custom and atmosthere, to allow them, to think that the adoption of masculine tradition is essential to feminine emancipation—this is to inflict a cruel wrong on young womanhood. The ampier provisions which the world rightly demands for women may be found in our Eastern States in the organization within the university of women's colleges where she may be offered equal standards, examinations, opportunities and degrees, but a distinct social life organized around womanly ideals and far richer in content than men's colleges have attained."

The position of Wesleyan is peculiar. Complete co-education is working well in some places and some institutions. So is the system of distinct colleges for men and for women. The question for Wesleyan is peculiar spirit, or whether it is wise to graft feminine education uron a half-century or a century-old system which has its peculiar customs and traditions and its own peculiar spirit, or whether it is wiser to graft feminine education uron a half-century or a century-old system which has its peculiar customs and traditions and its own peculiar spirit, or whether it is wiser to plant a new tree beside the old.

The young alumn feel that they occupy the conservative position on this question. They disclaim all sympathy with the unwise and sometimes unmannerly, criticism to which the young women the college have now and then been subjected. The young women have a perfect right there, they admit, and until the policy of the trustees shall be changed they have no apology to make for their presence.

The young alumni recommend "that for the permanent good of the college and the young women themselves, the trustees be petitioned by the Young Alumni Association of New York for a declaration of policy in line with the natural development for the older New England colleges.

"The New York Young Alumni Association respectfully and earnestly urge their convictions upon the Board of Trustees, not because they can claim to represent the whole body of graduates, but because they feel deeply that any policy for our beloved alma mater would be unwise and perhaps disastrous which should fail to inspire the men of the younger generation with faith in Wesleyan's future."

REAL ESTATE NEWS.

The sale in partition at auction of the Lipmann Toplitz estate was a very successful one and brought $458,900, the price in nearly every individual sale being high. In spite of the stormy weather a fair-sized crowd was present. composed principally of operators and speculators. The bidding at times was slow, as men were unwilling to display eagerness to secure particular pieces of property offered, but when any of it was near to a sale the bidding became more brisk. In one instance an opening bid of $15,000 stood for some time before it was raised, and competition gradually strengthened until the property was knocked down for $33,500. Several other auctioneers were offering property for sale at the same time that the Toplitz estate was being disposed of, and large sums were invested, the day's sales amounting

Real-estate brokers have another source of worry now in addition to the Stranahan bill, that of the probable tax which will be required to meet the expenses of the city government. A broker prophesied yesterday that unless coercive measures should be taken, or the voters take the city government out of the hands of the men now in power, the city would be bankrupt in five years.
